	Phibul did submit to the Regency Council the list of ranking Army, Air, and Navy commanders who made the request that the new Constitution not be promulgated.* He is reported to have remarked that he could see no reason why the demand was forthcoming from the Navy since that branch of the armed forces had stated that they did not wish to meddle in politics. Upon receipt of the above request, the Regency Council cabled the King for advice. His answer (reported in the press) precipitated the outright rejection of all Navy demands as being against the desire of His Najesty. The Regency Council was then advised to sign the Constitution for its promulgation.
